Meanings of colors pdf

You know how within a few minutes of meeting someone new, you kinda already know if you're besties for life or avoid each other like a plague when the convo ends? Later, you chalk that reaction up: I don't know, they just had a certain vibe. But it may be less their vibe (whatever it really means) and more to do with their aura of color, says Pamala Oslie, an aura expert and author of Life Colors. Even if people don't see the aura, we all feel it, he explains. That's why you can meet someone for the first time and have either a Ugh or AN OMG gut reaction-it all depends on whether your aura colors are compatible. Even if people don't see the aura, we all feel it. But before diving into the wide world of aura-color compatibility, you need to learn the basics. The human aura of color, also known as their life color, Oslie notes, shows their personality, relationships and career tendencies. These are the one or two colors of aura that are closest to the body, he explains, adding that most people give out two aura colors (because people are complex, mkay?). Of these two aura colors, each has a primary and secondary one. So, you can be mainly yellow with some purple, or mainly blue with some reds. Sometimes Oslie, who says she sees 14 aura colors, has met people with only one, but it's quite rare. To find out about your aura of colors, Oslie offers an online quiz on her website. Knowing the color of your aura is key, he says, because it can not only help you understand who you are, but also give you real permission to be who you are. (Feel stuck in a dead end job? Check your aura color. You're going to keep fighting your s.o.? Compare those auras. Do you need to manage your money better? Use. Your. Aura.) Each aura-colored personality has different needs, Oslie says. I don't do it to put someone in or categorize them; it's to help people know how to navigate their lives so they can be happy and fulfilled. If you've run down all the different aura of color personalities (more on that sec), you'll also get a better understanding of your friends, family, and even that cool rando you met at a party last week. Then it's easier to communicate, get out, and bring the best out of each other, Oslie says. And who doesn't want it? Here's what every aura of color means and how to tell what it's like to be yours: What it means when your aura color is yellow: Yellows are basically free-spirited little kids on the planet, says Oslie. They're playful. They don't look like their age. They don't know their age. They're perennial Peter Pans. (In other words, the whole man cast southern charm.) It's going to be like you? Well, put up, fiery-here's how to tell if you're really mellow yellow: If you had your way, you would all play and not work. Your creative juices are pretty much always ~ flowing ~. Freedom is basically your middle name (not that Mary good too). You're known for being spontaneous. You need nature in your life. You have to work out to be happy. You have an epic sense of humor. Although you'd probably never admit it, you're a little human mind. You can easily hurt your feelings. You don't like being told what to do. You don't want to be tied up... Which probably explains why you always seem thirsty after someone who is not available. In a perfect world, yellows would go straight from the sandbox to a sunny retirement, but since most people need to punch the clock (that, ya know, survive), you're likely drawn to creative, healing, or physical work, says Oslie. Yellows tend to be comedians, massage therapists, doctors, veterinarians, or yoga instructors. Some celebrities with yellow auras include Ellen Degeneres and Kate Hudson (both are yellow-blue), according to Oslie, while Brad Pitt and Harrison Ford have yellow-tan auras. What it means when your aura of color is purple: Violets are an important mission-they visionaries, global humanitarians ... In Willy Wonka and the Chocolate Factory, Violet Beauregarde was a selfish AF, but purple auras are anything but. The cannies have an important mission – they are visionaries, global humanitarians, says Oslie. They want to make a difference, help others and generally improve people's quality of life. But it's not all philanthropy and pleasantries, here's what more violets are into: Whether backpacking or jet-setting is more your speed, you're obsessed with travel (and have passport stamps to prove it). You've always been pulled out of art. There are so many things you want to do in life... But you're not always sure how you can do it all. You see the big picture and don't understand why others just don't. Have you ever said in the clouds? Yes, I did. But when you focus on the project, you're basically unstoppable. You're naturally compassionate, which is probably why you have so much deep feeling. You speak visually, like I have a vision, and I have a dream. Sometimes your dreams are so big, you wonder if you'll ever achieve them. The only time you're watching someone is on Instagram – you're a born leader. You just grow up no matter what you do the other one it's going to get bored of you. When you meet someone new, you trust your intuition to read them. In terms of romance, you don't accept anything less than an equal partner in life. Because violets are artists (not that you ever really describe yourself as such), they usually go after a career in art. In fact, a lot of their fave writers, filmmakers, photographers, actors and performers are purple. Case in point: Oprah. Oslie says she has a violet-yellow aura. And btw, George and Amal Clooney are both purple-yellow, too. Speaking of George and Amal, eee how these two purple-yellows thrive in love: Other violets, however, ditch the brush politics and/or the law. Two famous examples of citizen-centered purple auras are Abraham Lincoln and Martin King Jr., according to Oslie. So... yes, you're in good company. What it means if your aura of color is blue: If you've ever thought about auditioning for The Bachelor or Bachelorette (even if it was only a few wine-fed secs), you've probably got some blue for you. The Blues want to be in love. That's their priority number one, says Oslie. They are the most emotional, loving, caring people on the planet. I wonder if you're real blue. Here's how to say: You're definitely teared up watching a commercial (and not just during the Super Bowl). Friends would call, and i'm sure you'd be called a hopeless romantic. The Golden Girls theme song describes their friendship style T. If someone is sad or upset, you can't help but come to the rescue. You have a tendency to take care of people everyone else has given up. If you feel good, blue, you're probably going to throw yourself a party of pity. You're all about driving-or-die-level loyalty. If you commit, stick to it. You're not just a woman (or hubby) material- your relationships are designed to last. Like the violets, the blues want to help people – only on a smaller scale. They thrive in a career that allows them to establish one-on-one connections with teachers, counselors or nurses. But some celeb blues have turned their caring tendencies into acting talents, such as Meg Ryan (every Nora Ephron rom-com ever) and Jennifer Aniston (every time she says, Oh, dear, on Friends). What it means when your aura color is green: Greens are type-A workaholics, says Oslie. They are very driven to accomplish [goals], succeed and make money. ( Cue Money by Cardi B) But it's not about benjamins, honey, here are some other features that might make you green: Move on, Springsteen. You're the boss. Patience isn't exactly your forte-you want things done, like, yesterday. Everyone comes to you for financial advice (because you actually know what's going on). You've been known for other people's sentences. You're a smart cookie, and you know it. At the top of the game you create jobs for others. But if you're in contention, you have to win. By criticizing others, judge Judy can be given a run for her daytime TV money. You have a tendency to play the blame game. You save no expense on material things (luxury cars, designer clothes). Kermit said it's best: It's not easy to be green. So while this avocado-esque aura of color does get a bit bad rep (don't shoot the messenger), greens often have a ton of people depending on their success. They are usually representatives of corporations, stockbrokers, real estate agents and, of course, the celebrities of financial brothers. As much as they could love their high-stakes careers, they come with tons of high-pressure situations. If it sounds like you (and you don't totally love to get some positive inspo from these famous greenies: Barbara Walters, Bill Gates (green-violet), David Letterman (green-yellow) and Warren Buffet What does that mean? Means? Your aura color is tan: Tans want security and stability. Now I know what you mean (because tbh, I thought well): Tan has an aura of color? Oslie says it's certain. Tans want security and stability, he explains. You know your super-rational friend who talks to you every time you think about blowing your paycheck in a very cute pair of boots? yes, they're tan. If this friend is you, here's what else you can expect when they live in tan land: You value practicality-and want as much of it in your life as possible. At the end of the day, all you want is a secure paycheck. You're a textbook definition of detail. Slow and steady wins in the race are your life motto. You're the voice of reason among your friends. Expressing emotion? I've never heard of it. You tend to live in your head... Much. Do you have a tanti in your aura? You're probably best suited for computer programming, engineering and accounting. But any career that allows you to flex your hands-on decisions making muscles will make you happy. If you're interested in a slightly more creative pastime, however, take a page out of Clint Eastwood's book. Oslie says she's a famous tan. (All together now: oh.) What it means when your aura of color is red: For starters, Olivia Newton-John's Let's Get Physical is a low-key soundtrack to your life. You may be putting a lot of time and effort into your proper physique, and you're d'mn proud of it. They like the physical pleasures of being in the physical body, explains Oslie. Take a quick break from the supersets and peep what else reds are into: Your will is as strong as your quads after a leg day. Whether it's your last date or the next business venture, your passion is hot. Unfortunately, so is your temperament. Your love life can be explosive (in a good way), but it can also spell problems with the life-partner-finding department. Eating and drinking are two of your favorite activities. Followed by heavy sweat sesh. The Reds need a career that allows them to express themselves physically, says Oslie. Body builders, dancers, surgeons, truck drivers and trainers are all red-ready professions. Apparently so is the pop superstar: Both Madonna and Lady Gaga are famous for the red touches of purple, Oslie explains, which checks out (just consider how loud and proud they are on stage). Which aura colors are compatible with each other? Just like zodiac signs, some auras are more game-made in the multicolored sky than others. Difference? While zodiac signs are generally most suitable for adjacent characters, aura colors are usually exactly the same or similar in colors. A lot of the time blues are blues and yellows tend to attract each other too, Oslie explains, referring to the primary aura of colors. Tans also tend to attract their fellow tans, but greens and yellows can also make for a love connection. Violets, however, can be amazing with... as long as they share he says that the general vision. But they must also have their own projects and their own focus. Otherwise, they can do a little competition with each other, and it's not bueno. Instead, they may find their happily life after red, green or blue. Exception to the rule? Reds are best off on greens and violets, according to Oslie. With greens, it's the other way around: They pair well with violets, reds and tans. Like a Christmas tree, amirite?
